

Oceanair making waves

OCEANAIR has been in business since 1999, initially to offer the Fujitsu brand, but since then has added the Sanyo range in 2001 and most recently the LG brand in 2006.

The Nottingham office was opened in late 2001 and, after five years of growth, 2007 marks a major step forward in Oceanair's expansion plans.

Bob Cowlard (ex Sanyo European vice president) has made his mark since becoming md in 2006.

The North London office at 1 Ballards Lane, Finchley was opened last year under the leadership of Giles Pratt and is well positioned on the underground network to give full support to central London activities.

An updated and fresh website was launched at www.oceanairdistribution.co.uk.

A new large stock holding branch was opened in Bristol in December 2007 also offering training and showroom facilities. A fully installed working Sanyo GHP is connected to all indoor unit types for demonstration purposes. With the opening of Bristol came three more external sales staff under the guidance of Neil Baxter, branch manager.

The external sales staff at Oceanair South was also further strengthened with the addition of Mark Holt.

Oceanair forged new relationships with Calor Gas to roll out the world's first LPG-powered heat pump VRF ac using Sanyo's GHP (a unique sales partnership) and with John Shipman Contracting to harness Reflok, the pipe joining technology used by NASA.

Soon to be opened is Oceanair Design which will be headed up by Richard Tyson. This will enable the company to offer a more tailored and dedicated facility for consultants. In short Oceanair has had a very busy year of expansion doubling of staff levels and is looking forward to a competitive 2008.
